

Congratulations! You passed!

Next Item

1. Which of the following statements are true (Select all answers that apply)?

1 / 1 point

The biggest problem in porting Java code to Linux is often fear

Correct

This is becoming less true

There are a number of choices which can be used for the Java implementation on Linux machines, and one can switch between them

Correct

There are a number of implementations which can even be used at the same time

Java programs developed on other systems can be expected to run without modification on Linux

Correct

This is too optimistic, but ideally is true

Java programs need to have some changes to the source before they can run reliably on Linux systems

Un-selected is correct

Porting Java programs to Linux requires specialized expert input

Un-selected is correct

2. Which utility can be used to select the default Java Implementation on a Linux system?

0 / 1 point

which

setpref

This should not be selected

There is no standard program with this name alternatives

choose

3. Which commands will show you information about which version of Java you are running (Select all answers that apply):

1 / 1 point

java -version

Correct

This will give the correct information

version --full java

Un-selected is correct

$ readlink -f $(which java)

Correct

This will give the correct information

select --show java

Un-selected is correct

4. Which of the following are Integrated Development Environments that can be used for Java on Linux (Select all answers that apply)?

1 / 1 point

emacs

Un-selected is correct

DDD

Un-selected is correct

gdb

Un-selected is correct

NetBeans

Correct

Absolutely

Eclipse

Correct

Absolutely

5. If you are experienced in using Eclipse on another operating system, when moving to Linux:

1 / 1 point

You will have to start over, as the interface and functioning are rather different

The interface and functioning should be almost the same and have little or no learning curve required

Correct

This is the correct answer

